

Supreme Court Cases

Note: The list of important cases can be endless. What is important for you is that through a investigation of these cases (and others from your note cards) you understand the relationships of the branches of government, the major principles of our Constitution, and a develop a better understanding of the policy making process.

Constitutional Foundations & Underpinnings	Marbury v. Madison (1803)	Court establishes “Judicial Review” concept- affirms the Court’s position as a coequal branch of government having considerable influence on the politics of government and direction of public policy.
Constitutional Foundations & Underpinnings	McCulloch v. Maryland (1819)	Marshall Court defines what is meant by “necessary and proper” and established the primacy of federal government power over state government.
Constitutional Foundations & Underpinnings	Gibbons v. Ogden (1824)	Marshall Court says only national gov’t can regulate interstate commerce, not individual states per Art I, sect. 8 commerce clause.
Constitutional Foundations & Underpinnings	Barron v. Mayor of Baltimore (1833)	The case was particularly important in terms of American government because it stated that the freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights did not restrict the state governments.
Constitutional Foundations & Underpinnings	United States v. Lopez (1995) United States v. Morrison (2000)	Rehnquist Court decision in what some call the “devolution federalism” era. For years Congress had used the interstate commerce clause to encroach into a number of areas normally reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment. The commerce clause does not give Congress unlimited powers more appropriately reserved to the states. This begins a policy of the reigning in of “creeping federalism”. In the Lopez case, the majority opinion presents an excellent overview of the various interpretations and phases of federalism since the Founding.
Civil Liberties	Gitlow v. New York (1925)	Court nationalizes the Bill of Rights for the “first” time (“Incorporation Doctrine”). By the 1960’s, the Court will apply almost all of the provisions of the Bill of Rights to the states through the 14th Amendment’s Due Process Clause.
Civil Liberties	Weeks v. United States (1914) Wolf v. Colorado (1946) Mapp v. Ohio (1961)	Establishment and development of the “Exclusionary Rule”- illegally obtained evidence cannot be used against a defendant at trial. Made applicable to the states in Mapp .
Civil Liberties	Gideon v. Wainwright (1963) Malloy v. Hogan (1964) Miranda v. Arizona (1966)	Landmark rulings dealing with the rights of the accused, government interrogations and the right to counsel.
Civil Liberties	Everson v. Bd. of Ed. (1947) Engel v. Vitale (1962) Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971)	Establishment Clause and school prayer- Public school policy that permits, endorses, or encourages prayer violates the 1st Amendment. Prayer in school is allowed if it is student initiated, student-led, and voluntary
Civil Liberties	Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972)	Decided that the application of WI’s compulsory high school attendance law to children of members of the Conservative Amish Mennonite Church violated the parents’ rights under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment.

Civil Liberties	Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940) City of Boerne v. Flores (1997)	Free Exercise Clause- Latter case struck down the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 saying that Congress may enact legislation enforcing constitutional rights established by the Court, but it does not have the power to expand or enlarge those religious freedom rights.
Civil Liberties	Schenck v. United States (1919)	Free Speech- Court establishes the “clear and present danger” doctrine with respect to subversive and unpopular speech. This is the case in which Justice Holmes uses the famous “falsely shout fire in a theater and cause a panic” analogy in drawing the line on the limits of free speech.
Civil Liberties	Near v. Minnesota (1931)	Near set forth a general principle that came to define freedom of the American press. Possibly, more importantly, the ruling stiffened the backbone of countless editors and publishers and helped stave off periodic attempts by politicians, judges, and prosecutors to muzzle the journalistic watchdog.
Civil Liberties	New York Times Co. v. United States (1971)	Censorship cases (“prior restraint”) - Speech that addresses matters of public concern may not be censored. Pentagon Papers case.
Civil Liberties	Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier (1988)	Under the First Amendment, school officials can censor student newspapers when they can justify their decision by stating an educational purpose.
Civil Liberties	Miller v. California (1973) Reno v. ACLU (1997)	Often referred to as the “Miller Test”, the Court stipulated three tests for determining what is obscene: (1) whether the average person, applying local community standards, would find that a work, taken as a whole, appeals to a prurient interest; (2) whether the work depicts in a patently offensive way sexual conduct specifically defined as “obscene” in law; and (3) whether the work lacks “serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.” In the Reno v. ACLU case, the Court struck down provisions of the Communications Decency Act of 1996 which attempted to limit minors’ access to internet pornography. The law which prohibited “indecent” and “patently offensive” material found on the internet was too vague and could result in a “chilling effect”.
Civil Liberties	New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964)	The Court defined what is meant by libel and slander as it pertains to public officials and public figures. Individuals must show that false statements were made and publicized with malice and knowledge of their falsity or with “reckless disregard of their truth or falsity” This standard makes it very hard for public figures to win libel suits.
Civil Liberties	Tinker v. Des Moines (1969) Texas v. Johnson (1989)	Landmark symbolic speech cases. In Tinker , student expression (wearing of armbands) is protected so long as it does not cause a “material disruption or substantial interference”. In Texas v. Johnson , the burning of a flag (which the Court determined to be only a symbol) in public is protected by the 1st Amendment.
Civil Liberties	Furman v. Georgia (1972) Gregg v. Georgia (1976)	In Furman , the Court ruled that the death penalty violated the 8th Amendment because of the indiscriminate and inconsistent manner in which it was imposed. Four years later in Gregg , the Court upheld a state law that “contained sufficient standards to pass constitutional muster” to eliminate excessive jury discretion in imposing the death penalty.

Civil Liberties	Griswold v. Connecticut (1965)	Landmark ruling in which the Court establishes that there is a “penumbra” of rights. These are civil liberties closely attached to the Bill of Rights. In this case, the right of consenting adults to use birth control is a privacy right protected under the 4th, 9th, and 14th Amendments.
Civil Liberties	Roe v. Wade (1973) Webster v. Reproductive Health Services (1989) Planned Parenthood v. Casey (1992)	Right to privacy and the abortion issue. These three cases show how the Court established the absolute right to choice (Roe v. Wade) through the present interpretation which says that the right exists but states may pass restrictions so long as it does not impose an “undue hardship or burden on the mother” (Planned Parenthood v. Casey).
Civil Liberties	Cruzan v. Director Missouri Dept of Health (1990)	Right to privacy and right to die. Court said that competent people have a right to die and incompetent persons must have a surrogate with “clear and convincing” evidence that this is what the incompetent patient desired. Resulted in passage of “living will” statutes in several states.
Civil Liberties	Lawrence v. Texas (2003)	Court strikes down TX statute criminalizing private consensual gay behavior as unconstitutional invasion of privacy.
Civil Liberties	Korematsu v. United States (1944)	The Supreme Court upheld the exclusion of Japanese Americans from the Pacific coastal region. The needs of national security in a time of crisis, it said, justified the exclusion orders. The war powers of the President and Congress, specified by the Constitution, provided the legal basis for the majority decision. A report in 1983 concluded: “A grave injustice was done to American citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry who, without individual review or any probative evidence against them, were excluded, removed, and detained by the United States during World War II.” In 1988, on the basis of the 1983 report, Congress officially recognized the “grave injustice” of the relocation and internment experience and offered payments of $20,000 as compensation to each person still living who had been detained in a relocation center.
Civil Rights	Brown v. Board of Education (1954)	State laws that allow for separate but equal public educational facilities based on race violate the Equal Protection Clause. This landmark case overturned Plessey v. Ferguson (1896) . It is also important because it is the case that sparked the Civil Rights Movement of the 50’s & 60’s, culminating in the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.
Civil Rights	California Regents v. Bakke (1978)	Landmark case that paved the way for issues involving affirmative action. The Court held that a state university could not admit less qualified applicants solely because of their race (quotas). However, a university could adopt an “admissions program where race or ethnic background is simply one element- to be weighed fairly against other elements- in the selection process.”
Civil Rights	Adarand Contractors v. Pena (1995)	Congress and the states must demonstrate a “compelling governmental interest” (strict scrutiny test) to sustain any affirmative action programs it engages in. In this case, the Court struck down the Department of Transportation’s awarding of a highway construction contract to a minority bidder.

Civil Rights	Baker v. Carr (1962) Reynolds v. Simms (1964) Wesberry v. Sanders (1965)	Baker paves way for federal courts to adjudicate legislative apportionment. Reynolds uphold famous “one man, one vote” standard for state legislative apportionment and Wesberry applies the standard to U.S. Congressional districts.
Civil Rights	Heart of Atlanta Motel v. U.S. (1964)	Court upholds Civil Rts Act of 1964 . Congress can mandate hotel owner to serve black customers under interstate commerce clause.
Elections, and campaign finance	Buckley v. Valeo (1976)	Campaign spending is a form of political expression the 1st Amendment protects. The Constitution forbids Congress from limiting individual political campaign expenditures. However Congress can regulate contributions to candidates and parties. The decision opened the door for PACs to spend unlimited amounts of money for campaigning activities so long as they’re not directly coordinated with a particular campaign.
Elections, and campaign finance	McConnell v. FEC (2003)	Court upholds provisions strictly regulating “soft money” in Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform act of 2002. Provision forbidding people 17 yrs or younger from contributing to federal campaign struck down as violation of 1st amendment.
Elections, and campaign finance	Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission (2010)	Landmark decision suggests that corporate funding of independent political broadcasts in candidate elections cannot be limited under the First Amendment.
Elections, and campaign finance	Bush v. Gore (2000)	A narrow 5-4 majority ruled that Florida’s practice of allowing local election jurisdictions to establish their own procedures for counting ballots and determining voter intent is inconsistent with the Constitution’s Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses. It ruled that Florida’s procedures for manually recounting presidential votes were not specific enough when presidential candidate Al Gore demanded a recount of the ballots in the Florida presidential election. The case handed George W. Bush the presidency in 2000.
Congress	Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chada (1983)	The requirement that an executive decision must lie before Congress for a specified period before it takes effect (legislative veto) is unconstitutional. “Congress cannot take any action that has the force of law unless the president concurs in that action.” Despite this ruling, Congress has passed a number of laws containing legislative vetoes, most notably the War Powers Act (1973)
Presidency	United States v. Nixon (1974)	The Court held that neither the doctrine of separation of powers, nor the generalized need for confidentiality of high-level communications, without more, can sustain an absolute, unqualified, presidential privilege. The Court granted that there was a limited executive privilege in areas of military or diplomatic affairs, but gave preference to "the fundamental demands of due process of law in the fair administration of justice."
Presidency	Clinton v. New York City (1998)	In 1996, Congress passed a law granting the president authority to line item veto certain types of appropriations bills and tax provisions. The Court voided this law claiming it violated the “separation of powers” concept.
Presidency	Clinton v. Jones (1997)	The Court ruled that the president of the U.S. is not temporarily immune from civil law suits, based on actions before entering office, filed during a president’s term in office.
2nd Amendment	District of Columbia v. Heller (2008)	Held that the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution protects an individual's right to possess a firearm for private use in federal enclaves.
